The Wonderful Carter Caves Near the visitor and conduct him around its im-Chesapeake and Ohio-Wild Scenery and Natural Bridges.

The following interesting description of this eity:

some may be pleased to learn that the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, now completed to Louisville has opened a highway to one of the most picturesque and romantic spots anywhere else to be found.

THE CARTER CAVES,

in northeast Kentucky, and the wild scenery for miles around, with its natural bridges and natural tunnels, its grand gorges and stupendous cliffs, present to the excursionist a most inviting and interesting combination of natural euriosities. The approach to the caves for several miles leads through scenery highly picturesque and romantic. The Cascade Fernery, one of nature's rarest specimens of wild scenery, cannot fail to inspire its beholder with awe and admiration. The dashing Tygart is next reached, a stream of wilder romance than the precipitous Arno so greatly admired by the Roman Arno, so greatly admired by the Roman bard. The Tygart's colossal walls, reared on each side by the Divine Artificer several hundred feet in height, are cavernous limestone and enclose between their parallel lines the bonny blue waters of the stream as it rolls incessantly onward to mingle with "La Belle Riviere" in its long meandering course to the great reservoir of waters. The tops of these gigantic cliffs are crowned with ferns and evergreen plants and trees for miles beyond the farthest vision. Having crossed the distance beheld through the light and between the pillars of Hercules Calpe and Abila, at the mouth of Crystal branch. The way then leads along the picturesque gracefully waltzing to the music of her glen of the brook for a mile or more, enbluffs, presenting every fantastic shape imaginable. On emerging from the glen and its highly-exciting scenes the admirland castle of this fairly land, with its immense piazzas two stories high surof woods of Nature's own creation.

Swingle's Cave is only seventy-five yards from the hotel, although of considerable magnitude, it is not to be compared with any of the other caves in point of beauty or magnificence. Its most interesting features are found in its unrivaled spring, its

and the remains of the old vats and troughs, which reveal a history of long then for the first time taken at Minnie's time ago, when they affored saltpetre for the Kentucky riflemen long before the grand epoch when they accompanied Col. Dick Johnson on the eventful occasion of his killing the great Indian chief Tecum-

X cave is in the rear of the hotel, and is entered by an orifice about fifty feet from the base of a very high perpendicular cliff; this is done by wooden steps. The cave is truly wonderful for its magnificent avenues crossing each other near the centre, and thus forming a perfect letter X of immense magnitude. The avenues are ornamented on each side with stupen lous stalagmite pillars and intervening network, extending from the floor in some places over fifty feet to its vaulted roof.

Laurel cave, situated at short distance below X, presents rare specimens of stalactites and a great variety of incrustations of white gypsum of great beauty.

Crystal Branch Cave is the grandest in tions, number of halls, churches, avenues, quiet, may each find gratification here in court-rooms and its grand secret chamber his peculiar fancy. Tityrus may recline into which the guide will introduce the mense circuit, and then offer him the opportunity of trying his own skill in finding the way he entered this compartment from the adjoining avenue. Few have ever sucthe similitudes of nearly all the animals While excursionists are preparing to cross the Atlantic in search of the wonders of Switzerland's wild scenery and the ensentations of every descriptions of vessel, from Noah's Ark upon Ararat to the Arctic from Noah's Arktic from Noah's steamer Jeannette among iceburgs. Many of these scenes, when viewed by chemical lights, are truly grand and imposing.

THE NATURAL BRIDGE

over Crystal branch is one of the most in teresting features among this marvelous collection of natural curiosities; though its arch is not so high as that of Virginia's great bridge over Cedar Creek, yet its width and length are much greater.

Your correspondent first visited this grand museum of curiosities in 1843, before a road or other improvements marked the spot, yet he was so vividly impressed with nature's prodigal display of the marvelous exhibited here, that in the summer of 1859 he made an excursion with his family, consisting of his wife and two little daughters and a maiden cousin, to this wonderful panorama which had formerly inspired him with so much astonishment and pleasure. During the interval human industry had wrought some little improvement in the road through the wilderness of woods which led to it; but finding no settler in the neighborhood to give direction, and conjecturing that he must be in the near vicinity, he stopped his horse and left his family in the carriage to await his discoveries, Following the impressions made by his first visit, he wended his way through the dense forest, and in a short Tygart, the only passage to the caves is shade before him an apparently fairy scene of a huge rural castle surrounded by wideextended porticos, and a solitary female spinning-wheel. Your correspondent aplivened on either side by high evergreen proached and learned that he had really reached the newly erected cave hotel, and that the road before the door would lead him back to where he had left his family. On his return by the road, in a few hundred yards, he discovered his vehicle standing immediately upon the middle of rounding the main edifice; and in close the bridge; he soon explained the marvel proximity are its numerous cottages. The and conducted them by a circuitons path entire grounds are overshadowed by beau- to the foot of the stupendous wonder, when tiful forest trees, and encompassed for the maiden lady, in her ecstatic admirator miles around by a primeval wilderness tion, exclaimed, "Oh, my dear cousin, I do thank you for bringing me here!" All seemed highly gratified at the result of their tedious journey, and while filled with delight at the length and breadth and height of the stupendous sight, little Minnie ejaculated, "Mama, come here; I've found a spring"—which proved to be a natural fountain bursting from a rock beside the branch at the foot of the bridge. The water proved to be magnificent; so the baskets were gathered and lunch was spring, which for many years bore that name. Of late years a nice basin has been hewn in the rock, and the cool, sparkling water is still as refreshing to the visitor as that once quaffed from the "old oaken bucket, the moss-covered bucket, that hung in the well." -

This natural maseum of grand curiosities is twelve miles distant from Grayson, the county seat of Carter, and eight miles from Olive Hill, a village that gained much notoriety during our late civil war. If

was right in his opinion that the view at Harper's Ferry was worth a voyage across the Atlantic, surely a sight of this great combination of natural wonders is richly worth the travel along the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad. There are few individuals that would not greatly enjoy a visit to this wonderful display of natural curiosities. The scientist, the naturalist, the seekers of the collection for size, variety of forma- health, and the lover of shade, rest and

We are likely to experience one of the coldest periods in a long term of years, during the early part of the all together, and the latter portion is likely to be mild and open with a very advanced spring."

It is telegraphed to the press from Washington that there is a chance that Guiteau may be granted a short reprieve to give an opportunity for experts to make an examination of his mental condition. THE Washington Post of last Thursday contained the following account of a scheme on foot in New York to restore Roscoe Conkling to his seat in the Senate:

The Sun brings from Washington a story of a treaty of peace and friendship said to have been concluded between President Arthurand Mr. Conkling on one part, and Governor Cornell on the other side. This treaty is reported to provide that Governor Cornell is to be renominated for the Governorship, with the full support of the Administration and its earnest. support of the Administration and its earnest ald in his election. That Senator Lapham is to be nominated for Lieutenant Governor. whereupon he is to resign his seat in the Senate; that then Mr. Cornell is to appoint Mr. Conking to fill the vacancy in the Senate for two months previous to the assembling of the Legislature, which is finally to reelect him for the rest of the term, the National Administration and Corneil to use their best efforts to that end. Whether all this is mere gossip or something more we can not tell, but it seems very certain to us that the people of the State would only have to get wind of such a nice bargain to sit down on it with uncommon vehemence at the election next November. Governor Cornell and Senator Lapham are not likely to consider it a safe venture.

This college graduated last and spouts forth about ninety gallons of water, containing a bushel of salt every minute. The people for miles around visited the well, and carried home quantities of salt for domestic uses.

Frazier's Root Bitters are not a dram-shop whisky beverage, but are strictly medicinal in every sense. They act strongly upon the liver and kidneys, keep the bowels open and regular, make the weak strong, heal the lungs, bulid up the nerves and cleanse the blood and system of every impurity.

For dizziness, rush of blood to the head tending to apopiexy, dyspepsia, fever and ague, dropsy, plimples and blotches, scrofulous humors and sores, tetter, ring worm, white sweiling, erysipelas, sore eyes and for young men suffering from weakness or debility caused from imprudence, and to females in delicate health, Frazier's Root Bitters are especially recommended.

Dr. Frazier: I have used two bottles of your Root Bitters for dyspepsia, dizzlness, weakness and kidney disease, and they did me more good than the doctors and all the medicine I ever used. From the first dose I took I began to mend, and I am now in perfect health, and feel as well as I ever did. I consider your :ned-

Baron Seeman,

The Swedish nobleman will appear at the opera house on Monday, matinee and evening. Baron Seeman has hitherto only performed in the largest cities of the Unithave seen his original entertainment in Cincinnati speak of it in unmeasured terms of commendation. He is no magician but he is more than Herman, Heller, Anderson and all other leading magicians who have visited our shore. He entertains every living soul through his own merit. He shows us the world in which we live, in large life-like pictures on a canvas on which every object moves as in real life. The motion imparted to the remarkably bold and life-like views is a novelty sure to evoke the greatest admiration. Water is seen on the immense canvas slowly flowing in a broad river, beautifully ing in a mountain rain storm. Ruins and Trains of cars go and come. Wagons pass over the scene, processions wind in and out through the aisles and crypts of the cathedral, houses burn up right before signs of life and motion are seen in the long series of landscapes, marine and architectural views. The almost endless variety of the representations is proof against fatigue or monotony. Those who would see as expert an entertainment as ever was in Maysville should visit the opera

Three Men and a Woman Hanged in South Carolina.

KINGSTREE, S. C., June 23.—Immense crowds of colored people poured into town since daylight this morning to witness the quadruple execution that took place this afternoon in the jail yard. The four condemned were Anderson Singleton and Lucinda Fisdale, convicted of the murder of the woman's husband, and Boston Singtory and Abraham Anderson, convicted of arson. The gallows was erected under the eave of the jail, and was inclosed by a board fence twelve feet hight. The execution was private, but the crowds made frantic efforts to scale the fence. All the condemned ascended the scaffold at once, and the woman was the bravest in the lot. The drop was five feet fall. Four bodies dangled in the air at the same time. A large force of extra constables preserved order and kept the disappointed crowd under control.

We then pass through the quaint old Shaker village, where the old-fashioned ed States, and some of our citizens who stone houses look as if they had just passed through a spring cleaning. The old men in their blue coais and broad hats and the women in their white aprons and sun bonnets have just time to walk placidly to down the Kentucky river cliff. To attempt to describe the scenery, would be to give the reader an inadequate idea of what it really is. We drive for some time along a narrow turnpike and look up at two hundred feet of rock, moss, fern and cedar, while below us is a precipice as deep and dark as any we imagine Rip Van-Winkle ever saw among the Katskill. About half way down the cliff, we come in sight of the bridge at its dizzy hight above the river, and its immense towers standing like sentinels over it. The cav is about ten feet wide, four feet high, and extends back to somewhere in the adjoining county. I have mentioned only a few of the interesting places about the bridge, but time and space demand that I start on our return trip. This time, we went by way of Harrodsburg; and to say we created a sensation would but feebly express it. The people rushed to the saloon doors, and though they didn't say so, we know they admired our garland trimmed hats and sun burned faces. In the suburbs, perched upon the wall around the government grounds, were a party of boys and girls. and one saucy little Miss in particular, nearly upset one of our party, by smiling bewitchingly and kicking a pair of patent leather toes and pink silk ankles against the wall. We tried to keep him from waving and throwing kisses, but in vain. After pacifying our unruly member, we proceeded to investigate the grounds of Daughters College, one of our party who had graduated there, having previously Surely the note never reached its destination, for when we drove through the grounds, we were looked at from windows, doors, and corners of buildings, as if we were an uncaged menagerie. We found that the grounds were lovely, any way, A society event of more than unusual tucky, but there is one place which tour- and inwardly promised ourselves that is we ever had any dang iters to send

> Our adventures were now ended; and we reached Danville, fully convinced that we had more fun than any other eight people in the world; and that out excursion to the towers on the 20th of June would ever be a bright spot in our memory.

Another Iowa Cyclone.

Dubuque, Iowa, June 22.—Word was received at 10 o'clock to night, of a heavy wind and rain storm along the line of the side. Such facts as we learn were brought The girls trimmed the straw hats and in by conductor Keepers and some of the passengers. The storm struck Independence a little before 5:0'clock and wrought great destruction. Fences weré torn up under the wide-spreading beach, or Flaccus regale himself at the very head of the crystal fount. One may have visited Mount Blanc, or ascended the summit of Parnassus and explored the Corycian cave sacred to Pan; he may have scaled the peaks of Otter, which mark the highest points of our own Blue Ridge, or gazed admiringly upon mad Niagara, yet he will find much here in this great panorama of natural pictures to gratify his cuitured vision; where he may wander through immense tunnels not excavated by vulcan implements or the force of dynamite, or any other agency save that of the Great Omnipotent, while there are many unexplored fissures which may lead to depths as great as that of the grotto of Antiparos, which was supposed to communicate under the waters with the neighboring islands of the Ægean. Certainly there are unexplored communications here leading in every direction throughout this cavernous country as great in extent as the largest islands of the Grecian Archipelago. W. W. R.

Store Clothes and Civilization. As showing how easy it is for a savage to cast aside "the trammels of artificiality to rush into the glowing realities of savage life," the following is told of Rantzani, a famed Basnto chief: Rantzani was a nephew of Mashesh, of South African renown. He had taken, thanks to a missionary education, all the outer manners of a dandy. He wore a tweed coat, a white shirt, suspenders, a watch, chain, seals, gloves, and even a paper collar. He could talk of books, and was a subscriber to the Natal paper. Friends of Rantzani were quite positive that the charms of education had won Rantzani from the wild habits of his clan, for the young Basuto loved to loll in an American rocking chair, and certainly such an educated young fellow never would any more, so it was supposed, find pleasure in cattle-stealing and house-burning. The question of battle with the Boers was not agitating the savage mind, and Mashesh, it was thought, was only holding back the dogs of war until Rantzani's decision was heard. A meeting was called, at which Rantzani desired to be heard. He is described as having been dressed in wellfitting clothes, with patent leather boots, a straw-colored necktie around a stiff Byron collar. There is some doubt as whether this latter adjunct of civilization was linen or paper. As an excuse for human error, we are to suppose it was paper. Rantzani began to speak in a slow, inauimate way. He was talking of the advantages of peace and all it would do for his people. "Lions only have to fight and are miserable, but behold the sheep, how happy they are." Then his shirt collar hurt him and he made an effort to open it. "Our children go to the field and carry books and improve their little minds, instead of wasting their time in wild-bird catching." Then his shirt stud jammed into his neck. "People—wild people—the Kafirs call this bondage-nevertheless, the happy quietude of this life, which leads to contentment, has pleased me, but—but—" here the sharp, unyielding, knifebla le-like edge of his collar sawed into his swelling neck. Then he yelled: "I am tired of this imposture! These clothes confine my limbs once unfettered by any of the trammels of this civilized world I am trying to praise." Then, with a mighty effort, he tore the collar from his throat and trampled on it. Increasing in violent gestures he flung off his coat, his suspenders, cast aside his trousers, and in an instant was stark naked. Before him lay in one disordered heap his clothes. He danced on them. He rushed to a fire, seized a brand, and with his own hand set fire to the schoolhouse, and as it blazed, grasping a rifle, he at once became the fighting chief of the Basutos. Some time afterward, at the battle of Timi, almost alone, "he defended with desperate courage a mountain path. Since his relapse he has become more and more savage, and, although he is fairly well off, and still maintains a carriage and horses, yet his pleasures are pagan, and he is a thief and a liar." How much off this falling off from grace may be due to that paper collar future philosophers alone can determine. Finely invented descriptions of the natural instincts of his race really pale before this actual narration of facts. - New York Times.

BATCHELDER'S Ventilated Egg Case.

Patented February 15, 1881. Indispensible to Merchants Shippers

The outside frame of this carrier contains five trays, held in place by fasteners at end of case, as seen in cut. These Trays are constructed in reversible halves. The above cut shows one whole tray illied ready to be placed in case, each egg resting in its cardboard socket in such a manner as to be readily counted, candled, or transferred from tray to tray, or case to case without rehanding.

For cold storage this case will store 60 dozen with racks made to receive the haif trays, hence this is the cheapest storage case manufactured, saving largely in space.

The manner or holding the eggs on end prevents oscillation, addling, or breauge, and adds greatly to their freshness when carried iong in storage. Size of 30 dozen No. 1 cases 25x12x14, weighs 20 ponuds.

PRICES IN CHICAGO.

Shipper's No. 1, 30 doz. Case with Fillers complete - 65 Cents, Farmer's No. 1, 18 doz.
